MISCELLANEOUS READING.

WHAT THE MATTER WAS WITH HIM. Strolling down the streets of St. Louis, a few months since, I observed a stalwart sixfooter from Pyke, who was evidently a little by the head, gesticulating violently to an appreciative crowd, and duly acquainting his nearers with what was the matter with himself and his respected paternal. After his discourse had been sometime continued, one of the guardians of the law thought he could tell what ailed our friend, and undertook to cut his story short. At the time I left old Pyke had made a good fight, and had rather the better of the Charley, who to use Pyke's words, was "a gitting chawed up bad"—that was "what's the matter with him;" but the following eloquence was safely got off before the interruption took place: "I do allow Pop he's jest the greatest man ever ye see-he's naterally a little backered but you jest take Pop an rile him up some, and thar ain't no man as kin talk more nor what Pep kin talk. Thar is them as thinks thar ain't no fite into him; but I tell you he won't allow none of his children to take advantage onto him, and ef they any on 'em skites things at his head, thar ain't no man as will skite 'em back at 'em quicker'n what Pop 'll skite 'em back.

"Uncle Ben is some neither nor what Pop is, and he's a drefful ugly cuss-that's what the matter with him. Onct he got riled at Pop and 'lowed he'd lick him. Wal, he pirooted round for the old man, and he see him nigh the woods, and he peeled for him, he did. Pop he kep kinder quiet, like, tell Ben, got close and then he kitched the back hitch onto Ben, and he throwed him bad; and arter that, he tied the critter to a tree, and kep him thar tell it got dusky, like, a grinnin' at him; and when he was set loose, you never see no man look no foolisher nor what Ben looked. Oh, no! ef ever ye get in on Pop, and try fur the in turn onto him, there ain't no man as will throw yer quicker nor what Pop will throw yer.

"Aunt Bets she tried to skeer the ole man oncet. She made up a gost, she did, outen s piller-turnippy hands and bread head, and she put it in Pop's bed, and watched tell she got most asleep fur to hear him holler; but he jest did'nt holler, nary time—so she jest pecked in, fur she was afeered he was skeert so bad he cold'nt. But the ole man was all right, he was, he had eat up the crit-ter's head and hands, and thar he laid, fast asleep, on the cuss's chest. Pop allus allowed he got the best of Bets and the ole gost, but Bets she kep mum-that's what was the matter with her. You never heerd nobody keep no mummer about gostses nor what Bets kep about gostses. "Wall, thar ain't no use a spitten round

I know all Pop knows, and I hev picked up a heap outside I hev. Thar ain't no Pensilvieanny Dutch about me. I'm hard all the way down-jest feel on my back. Whoop-a-whoop I want a fight! That's what's the matter with me!"-N. Y. Times and Mercury. A GRAND OFFER.
